WeRateDogs - Let the numbers speak

Data from Twitter's WeRateDogs was analyzed to gain some insights into the world of dog rating. WeRateDogs is a Twitter account that rates people's dogs with a humorous comment about the dog and has over 4 million followers. Below is a short summary on some of the findings (based on 2,038 tweets), for more details and if you want to see how the analysis were conducted, check out the linked Jupyter notebook file.

-   Cooper, Penny, Lucy, Tucker, Charlie and Oliver are the most popular names for dogs.

-   Golden Retriever and Labrador Retriver are the dog breed with the highest number of tweets. But they are not the dog breeds with the most favorite counts or retweets on average. In the top ten list of favorite counts and retweet counts are dog breeds with only a single tweet or only two tweets. In total, 112 different dog breeds are present in the dataset.

-   Most dogs get a rating between 11 and 14 ("they're good dogs Brent.") However, 20% of all ratings are 9 or lower and only one rating is higher than 14.

- Dogs with a high rating are more likely to be favorited or retweeted.

- Even though the number of tweets per month is declining, the number of retweets and especially the number likes are increasing, i.e. with a less a number of tweets similar (or even more) retweets and likes are achieved.
